INTRODUCING

The 1950 Cincinnati Reds

The 37 aspirants carried on the 1950 roster of America's oldest professional baseball club represent a cross-section of our nation, hailing from 18 states ranging all the way from Oregon to Florida.

California, with five, boasts the highest total of native sons on the 1950 Redleg roster while Illinois and Ohio have produced four, Pennsylvania three, Texas, Oregon, New York, Kansas, North Carolina, Louisiana and South Carolina two each; and Alabama, Virginia, Utah, Missouri, Kentucky, Wisconsin and Florida one each.

The average Redleg is 6 feet, 1½ inches tall, weighs 188 pounds and is between his 26th and 27th birthday. Pitcher Nelson Potter is the senior member at 37 and the "baby" of the squad is 19-year old catcher Hobie Landrith.

Nine of the Reds' pitchers throw right and five are southpaws but 10 of the moundsmen bat right. Of the remaining 23 squadmen, 16 bat right and seven left while 20 throw right and only three are left handers.

Only six Reds are unmarried and 26 are veterans of World War II. Twenty have had some measure of college education.
